TAPESCRIPT

Last Saturday, I had plans to meet my best friend, Sophie, in the city centre. We wanted to do some shopping and then have lunch at a new café near the station. I was really looking forward to it because we hadn't seen each other for almost two weeks.

I set my alarm for eight o'clock, but unfortunately, I didn't hear it. When I finally woke up, it was already quarter past nine. I quickly got dressed, grabbed my bag and ran to the bus stop. Luckily, the bus was still there, so I thought everything was going to be fine.

However, after about ten minutes, the bus suddenly stopped. The driver told us there was a problem with the engine and we had to wait for another bus. I immediately texted Sophie to tell her I was going to be late.

When I finally arrived in the city centre, Sophie wasn't there. I called her, but she didn't answer. A few minutes later, I got a message from her. She was waiting for me outside the café — but I was standing outside a café with the same name on the other side of town!

In the end, we found each other almost an hour later. We didn't have enough time for shopping, but we had lunch together and laughed about the whole situation. It definitely wasn't the day we had planned, but it was still fun.
